The Passage

The museum was Priya's favourite place in the whole city, especially the dinosaur hall. She had visited so many times that she could recite the facts on every sign from memory - which dinosaur had the sharpest teeth, which one was as tall as a house, which one probably couldn't fly despite its wings. Today, though, something was different. A new skeleton stood in the centre of the hall, one she had never seen before, and a small crowd had already gathered around it.
